Got Ice Missiles?

New law can result in up to a $1k fine for drivers who don't remove snow.

Connecticut's new "Ice Missile Law" came into effect this January 1st, and law enforcement reports that they've already issued 230 tickets to truckers - and with fines ranging anywhere from $75 to $1,000 based on vehicle class that's a big chunk of change!

What's an "Ice Missile" you ask? Well, it's not what you see in the picture to the right. It's more like what you see in this YouTube Video showing a huge sheet of snow falling off the top of a truck. You can see at around 40 seconds into that video how that amount of snow falling onto a fellow motorist could cause safety issues on the road.

The law in Connecticut penalizes drivers - with special focus on commercial trucks - for not scraping the snow and ice from the tops of their vehicles before driving on public roads. The hope is that this will prevent accidents from occurring when ice or snow catapults off of one vehicle and hits another. New York, Pennsylvania, and New Hampshire also have similar laws on the books, although most states will ticket drivers for an unsafe vehicle if they are seen driving with piles of snow and ice on top of their vehicle.

These laws, of course, pose a tougher solution for commercial truck drivers than for non-pro motorists since their vehicles are so tall. One solution found online is the Multi-Use Snow Tool at ABetterSnowRake.com. This $144 tool folds up compactly to fit in your cab, but is easily assembled and can reach high up to the middle of your trailer to remove all the snow. Got another way you get the snow off of your truck? Share your ideas with us on our facebook page!
